Surviving The Drive From Connecticut To California

Summer's the time for family vacations, whether they're magical excursions to worlds of fantasy and fun via The Disney Channel's "Summer Animation Festival," or cross-country drives to see America first!

Whatever your plans, you want to have the most pleasure possible. If you're planning your first long automobile trip with the kids, try these ideas for making long cooped-up-in-the-car hours more enjoyable.

Pack For Ease!

Rule number one: don't overpack! Fewer things mean less to lose—and less mess in the car.

Make unloading at night easier by packing one suitcase with a complete change of clothes per person for each night on the road.

To stay tidy, cool and comfortable with minimum effort, outfit an in-the-car "survival bag" with items like towelettes, lotion, etc.

Pack For Pleasure!

Miles will go faster for kids if you:

- Allow each child to pack a few personal books and toys.
- Purchase and gift wrap inexpensive surprises (one per child per day on the road).
- Tape record favorite stories or songs to play on a portable cassette player.
- Carry a small styrofoam cooler stocked with items such as bottled water, juice, fruit, and other healthy snacks.

No-Equipment Entertainment

Have fun with simple games like these:

- Homemade tongue twisters. Choose a letter. Going around the car, make up a silly sentence using words beginning with that letter.
- Suitcase memory. Taking turns, each person names an item in an imaginary suitcase. The next person must recall the items named and add another. Players who leave an item out are out of the game.
- Silly songs. Write your own lyrics to a simple tune by having everyone take turns adding words.
- Riddle Marie (a color game even very young children will enjoy.) Someone pinpoints an object in the car without telling what it is, then says "Riddle, riddle Marie, I see something you don't see. It's...(name the colors)." Everyone takes turns guessing the object.

Smooth Rolling—On and On and On

Keep rolling smoothly with the least wear and tear on nerves and tempers by following these suggestions:

- Start early. Not only do you cover a lot of ground while the kids are asleep, but the hours of peaceful driving give you and your spouse time to visit.
- Plan several picnic meals. They add variety to on-the-road dining, are less expensive and give everyone much needed stretch-the-legs breaks.
- Explore along the route. The hour you spend in a local museum, ruins or scenic area might just become one of the most memorable moments in your journey.
- Avoid the tendency to push at the end of the day.
- Agree to rotate seats by the window on an alphabetical basis every 100 miles.
- Limit the number of times anyone can sing "Ninety Nine Bottles of Pop" to once a day.
- Give "tickets" or a special privilege for extra good behavior.

Relax and Relish the Time Together

Your drive can provide a wonderful opportunity to nourish an even greater sense of family togetherness as you share experiences, laughter and talk. With a little imagination, some patience and a lot of love it's true that getting there can be half the fun!

Along with the suitcases, maps, cameras and dog's water dish, pack these handy ideas for a terrific trip!

The Making And Romancing Of

THE SWORD IN THE STONE

For the grand finale of our Summer Animation Festival, we bring you the exclusive world television premiere of Walt Disney's "The Sword in the Stone." Sparkling with mirth, music and magic, this tale of young King Arthur and his adventures with Merlin, the way-out wizard, is enchanting entertainment at its best. Share it with your friends. You'll find a special invitation for them on page 29.

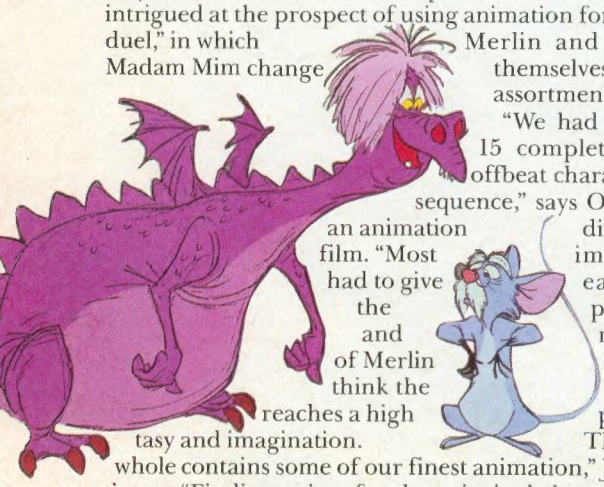
For this, his sixteenth full-length animated feature, Walt went to the celebrated novel by T. H. White. In the past Walt had adapted classic stories by masters like the Brothers Grimm, C. Collodi, Felix Salten, Kenneth Grahame, Lewis Carroll and James M. Barrie. "The Sword in the Stone" was his challenging attempt to transform a book by a contemporary author into an animated production. He was especially intrigued at the prospect of using animation for "the wizards' duel," in which Merlin and the sorceress Madam Mim change themselves into an odd assortment of creatures.



"We had to dream up 15 completely new and offbeat characters for that sequence," says Ollie Johnston, an animation director on the film. "Most important, we had to give each of them the personality and mannerisms of Merlin or Mim. I think the wizards' duel reaches a high point in fantasy and imagination. The picture as a whole contains some of our finest animation," Johnston continues. "Finding voices for the principal characters, though, caused a few headaches. Bill Peet, who wrote the screen story, was also doing the voice testing, and he tested literally dozens of people. He had arrived at the voice of Karl Swenson for Archimedes, the owl, but finally changed his mind and cast Karl, who was an experienced radio actor, as the voice of Merlin. 'Now I gotta go and test another tree full of owls,' Bill said. 'Try Junius Matthews,' Karl suggested. 'He played a potato on radio.' That sounded like a good recommendation, so Bill tested Junius and signed him. He was the thirty-fifth actor to read for the part of our owl.

"Frank Thomas (another animation director) did the squirrel stuff, and Walt told him to find a voice that sounded like a squirrel but didn't say any words. Now that's kind of a tough assignment. So all these people came in, and Frank would explain that he wanted a voice which didn't say anything but would sound like a squirrel might sound if it was trying to express some thoughts. And they'd say, 'Well, when you get this worked out let me know. I got an appointment over at NBC. I'll be around if you need me.' Finally this gal, Ginny Tyler, came in and she said, 'You're serious, aren't you?' Frank said yes, and so she started chattering away in squirrel talk. She sounded so charming and appealing that Frank signed her right away. Walt liked the voice when he heard it, and he introduced the idea of putting a Granny Squirrel in. Martha Wentworth, a marvelous actress, did that voice. The funny thing there was that Frank asked her to do some little short giggles. She ended up with a half hour of them on tape, and Frank had to sort through all of those—a tedious, time-consuming job—to find the two or three he wanted.

"Rickie Sorensen did the voice of young King Arthur. He was about 13 when we started the picture, and during the three years it was in production his voice began to change. We tried speeding up the tapes to see if we could raise his voice a little higher, but that didn't work out."

There were more than a dozen top vocal roles to fill, and the artists who won them included Sebastian Cabot as Sir Ector, Norman Alden as Kay, Alan Napier as Pelinore, and Barbara Jo Allen as the scullery maid. The Mellomen, who howled so melodiously as singing dogs in "Lady and the Tramp," provided voices for a number of other characters in "The Sword in the Stone."

While all this was going on, Walt Disney brought in his reliable songwriting team of Richard M. and Robert B. Sherman. They came up with "Higitus-Figitus" (Merlin's Magic Song), "That's What Makes the World Go 'Round," "A Most Befuddling Thing" (Squirrel Song), "Mad Madam Mim," "Blue Oak Tree" and the title tune, "The Sword in the Stone."

MORE AUSTRALIAN GOLD FOR FIVE MILE CREEK FANS

This month, "Five Mile Creek," the beloved Australian epic, draws to a close in "America" (see page 13). Although the little band of Five Milers is splitting up to follow separate paths, a new four-part mini-series, "Eureka Stockade," starting next month, will continue to make the world of the Australian gold rush a part of your life.

Fans of "Five Mile Creek" will find that "Eureka Stockade" shares the same high quality as their favorite show. It's not surprising, since both series benefit from the special touch of Henry Crawford, one of Australia's most respected TV producers. Renowned for his Emmy award winner, "A Town Like Alice," Crawford has consistently won the hearts of American viewers without sacrificing the "down under" feel of his many films and TV shows.

"More and more we've got to do films that bridge the two cultures," he says. "We have to come up with stories that have a universal theme: love or rebellion or fighting against odds; something that interests everyone." "Five Mile Creek" certainly lived up to Crawford's aims. For three seasons, you were enthralled by this saga of Australia in the mid-1860s. The believable, lovable characters who settled the little stagecoach way station brought the rowdy decade of bonanza fever to life.

Although "Eureka Stockade" takes place nearly a decade earlier than "Five Mile Creek," it is also set during the gold rush days. This action-packed tale dramatically recreates the 1854 rebellion which became known as Eureka Stockade—the only armed insurrection by free men in Australia's history.

At that time, Australia was ruled by a governor appointed by Great Britain. When the Governor decreed that all miners must purchase a license before digging for gold, and recruited ex-convicts to enforce the law, the "diggers" were enraged. The murder of a popular digger by one of the brutal ex-cons finally sparked the bloody rebellion.

Just as several Yankee adventurers were included among the Five Milers, American diggers join the Aussie rebels in "Eureka Stockade." Brett Cullen, who starred in the series "The Chisholms" and "Key Tortuga," plays Charles Ross, a Canadian/American who designs—and fights for—the rebels' flag. His girl friend, a San Francisco singer who performs on the gold fields, is portrayed by Californian actress Amy Madigan, most recently seen in "Places in the Heart."

American viewers will also recognize the superb Australian actor Bryan Brown, who won great critical acclaim in the States for his roles in "A Town Like Alice" and "The Thorn Birds." Brown plays Peter Lalor, the rebel leader.

Crawford has high hopes that "Eureka Stockade" will be as successful as "Five Mile Creek." Like that series, Crawford says, "It has plenty of action for young viewers, but at the same time, it's not too simple that 40-year-olds and over won't be able to enjoy it."

WHAT DOG IS RIGHT FOR YOUR FAMILY?

BY ISOBEL SILDEN

Not every child can play with tame raccoons, bear cubs and gentle black bears, like Jenny and Toby in "The Adventures of the Wilderness Family" (page 11). But your children will probably enjoy a friendly, playful puppy just as much. Parents like having a dog in the family too: Pets teach children responsibility, and a barking dog is a deterrent to prowlers.

The next question is: Which of the 128 breeds recognized by the American Kennel Club is right for your family? Or would you be better off with a mixed breed, known lovingly as a mutt?

Dr. Harvey C. Gissell has the answers. As the official veterinarian for Southern California dog shows—as well as having an active private practice in West Los Angeles—he's become an authority on matching the right breed to the right home.

Visitors to Dr. Gissell's office are welcomed with a friendly bark from the 11-year-old Labrador that comes to work with the doctor. It's not surprising that Dr. Gissell's first choice of a pet is the Lab.

"They're gentle, people-oriented dogs that are smart and want to please their owners. They're not excessively large; ours rides well in the car."

The full-grown Lab averages about 70 pounds, which means he needs a relatively large yard in which to exercise. The family living in an apartment would do well to consider either a miniature poodle or a dachshund.

"The poodle is a gentle, friendly little dog that doesn't need a lot of exercise. However, poodles do need to be trimmed and groomed regularly," Gissell continues.

"Dachshunds have a lot of nice things going for them too: they're small, and they don't shed too much. You can put them in a sports car, and you can keep them in an apartment. They're good for people who don't have a yard, or only have a small one."

Some of the other breeds have special needs or sensitive temperaments which may be inconvenient in a house pet. You should consider all these factors before making your selection.

"The German shepherd has two coats, so he sheds continually in warm climates. You'll be vacuuming dog hairs constantly!" Gissell warns.

"Irish setters and beagles want to go out and run. They don't want to live in a small yard. Ideally, they'd rather be chasing rabbits in Alabama.

"The Greyhound was bred to be a racer. You wouldn't want one of these speed demons in your home.

"I don't recommend Pekinese, because they're so nervous and have to be groomed all the time.

"Boston terriers don't particularly enjoy children. They're apt to be a little snappish.

"A lot of people see a cute little Saint Bernard and absolutely have to take it home. They forget it won't stay small and cuddly. The Saint is not a gentle dog. Because of the demand for them, they have been inbred—and they haven't been bred for temperament.

"The Old English sheep dog is also inbred. It was bred to herd sheep and protect the flock from wolves—not to be a family dog lying on the hearth.

"Doberman pinschers have gotten a bad reputation as dangerous police dogs. But I'm fond of them. They have a great deal of dignity."

According to Gissell, it's difficult to get a family pet that will also serve as a guard dog. "That would be a contradiction: how does the dog know who is a burglar and who is a friend of the family? That would require reflective thinking on the part of the animal. If dogs could do that, they could talk!"

Now what about mixed breeds? Gissell agrees with many of his colleagues that, as a group, mongrels are healthier than purebreds.

"Purebred dogs have the disadvantage of not getting new genes in their genepool," he says. "A mixed breed is frequently much more satisfactory."

We've all grown up knowing that "the dog is man's best friend." There is now medical evidence as proof: petting a warm, furry creature decreases stress and lowers blood pressure. It's hard to find less expensive health insurance, that also wiggles, barks, and gives unconditional love.

What are you waiting for?

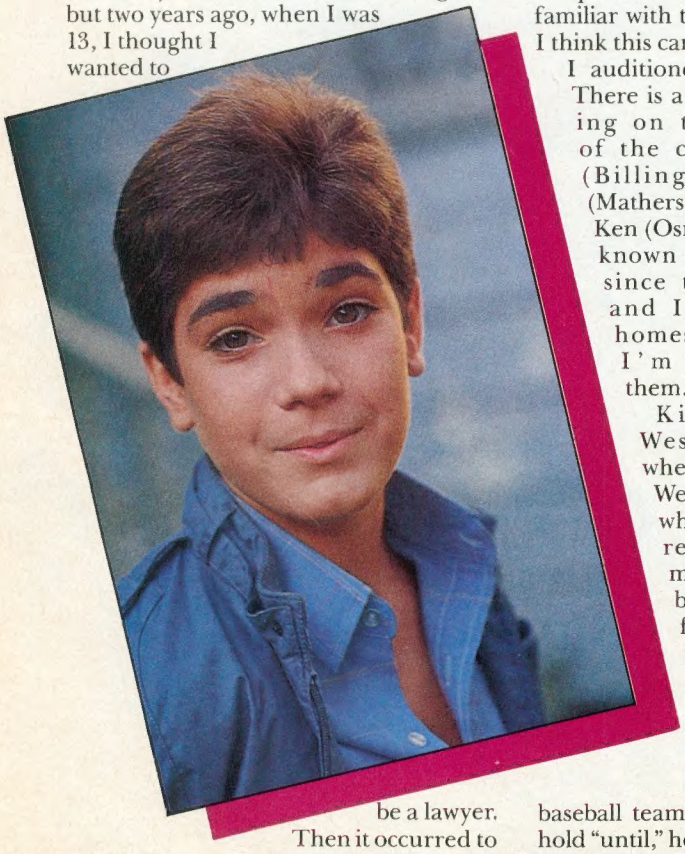
KIPP MARCUS

A RISING YOUNG STAR

Fan mail is one gauge of a star's popularity. Almost immediately after premiering "Still the Beaver" (see page 12) last November, we began getting letters for Kipp Marcus. On the strength of his fan mail today, which has increased from a trickle to a flood, Kipp is among the most promising young actors in television. He also is one of the newest: "Still the Beaver" marks his first TV appearance.

"Acting runs in my family," Kipp said during a break in filming. "Two of my uncles are actors, and my mother was a professional singer. My big brother, who's 16, directs and acts in school plays. I've always been interested in acting too, but two years ago, when I was 13, I thought I wanted to be a lawyer. Then it occurred to me that lawyers need to be actors on occasion, so I went back to my original ambition. I'm in the tenth grade; when I graduate from high school I want to go to USC and really study film and learn about directing and script writing."

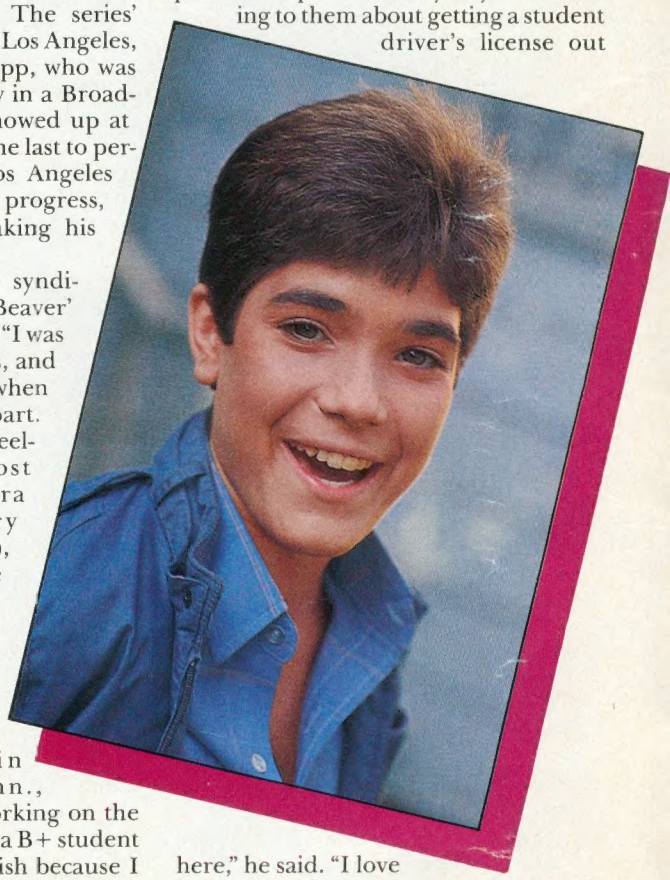


Kipp won out over 600 competitors for the role of Beaver Cleaver's oldest son Kip in "Still the Beaver." The series' producers held auditions in Los Angeles, Chicago and New York; Kipp, who was appearing with Ron Moody in a Broadway revival of "Oliver!", showed up at the final audition and was the last to perform. He was flown to Los Angeles where rehearsals were in progress, and a week later was making his television debut.

"I'd been watching the syndicated shows of 'Leave It to Beaver' for quite a while," Kipp said. "I was familiar with the characters, and I think this came in handy when I auditioned for my part. There is a real family feeling on the set. Most of the cast—Barbara (Billingsley), Jerry (Mathers), Tony (Dow), Ken (Osmond)—have known each other since the 1950s, and I'm not so homesick when I'm around them."

Kipp lives in Westport, Conn., when he's not working on the West Coast. He's a B+ student who likes "English because I read a lot, and the Humanities because I get to debate a lot in class." Five-feet-four and weighing in at 105 pounds, Kipp enjoys outdoor sports, particularly swimming, tennis, racquetball and baseball. He plays shortstop on the "Still the Beaver" baseball team, a position he intends to hold "until," he said laughingly, "the team goes professional."

So far, unlike many young, ambitious actors, Kipp is able to handle his career smoothly. He goes home after work to a rented apartment near the studio which he shares with his grandmother, who accompanied him to Los Angeles. He phones his parents every day. "I'm talking to them about getting a student driver's license out here," he said. "I love oldies, and the car I really want is a '59 Corvette, but for now I'll probably get a little Rabbit or something.



"I've been lucky in finding friends out here, too. It's kind of hard, coming to a new place. It takes a while, but once you make the friends it's great. I go out with them, see movies, eat pizza, learn the new words that are being used, and try to keep up with everything that's going on. Otherwise, you know, when I get out of this studio sound stage it'll be 1986 and I'll still be back in '85.

"My dad has said he wants me to be a normal kid. And I want to stay as normal as I can."

Disney Family Album

Series

A miniature steam engine chugs you directly into the world of Ollie Johnston, the gentle genius of Disney animation. Ollie's childlike spirit — reflected in his love of toy trains — is equally evident in the irresistible characters he created, from wide-eyed Alice in "Wonderland," to the boyishly charming Pinocchio. ("Peter Pan's" meek Mr. Snee is Ollie's favorite, "because he looks a little like me.") With the help of classic clips, the animator shows how he brought his "children" to life by conveying their emotions in every frame.

We're All Ears

Linda Palmer
Subscriber Services Director

Dear Friends,

I don't know what the thermometer says where you are, but it's sure hot here! Even though there are so many wonderful outdoor diversions in the summertime, I still like to "sneak" away occasionally and enjoy myself indoors where it's nice and cool! If you and your youngsters feel the same way, you'll find the Magazine's "Just for Kids" section especially valuable. This month we've included several activities that will keep your children happily entertained at home for hours. And if you're planning a long trip this summer, be sure to take the Magazine with you—it's a great travel companion! (Don't miss our tips for smart travellers on page 2!)

While you're relaxing inside this month, set aside some time to watch the world television premiere of "Sword in the Stone." My favorite sequence is the spellbinding — and funny — "wizards' duel" between Merlin and Madame Mim. I hope you enjoy it as much as I do!

Sincerely,

Linda

"STILL THE BEAVER'S" KIPP WINS FANS

Hi! I'm a big fan of Kipp Marcus. I would like to know if it is possible to have his address. If so, will you please place it in The Disney Channel Magazine?

Renee Hemmerling
Lakeside, CA

It seems like this second generation Cleaver is winning a devoted following–just like the Beaver! You can write to Kipp c/o The Disney Channel, 4111 West Alameda, Burbank, CA 91505.

MOUSE EARS FOR A NEW GENERATION

We subscribe to The Disney Channel, and as the mother of a child about to enter kindergarten in the fall, I wouldn't be without it.

I had just entered kindergarten myself the first time Jimmie Dodd ever asked, "Why? Because we like you." So a flow of happy tears came to my eyes when my daughter watched "The Mickey Mouse Club" for the first time and asked, "Is that big girl with the real dark curly hair the daughter of the lady on the peanut butter commercial?"

When I told her that the girl was the lady on the commercial, she said, "I thought so. She looks enough like her to be her daughter!"

HAPPY 75TH BIRTHDAY, BOY SCOUTS!

I subscribed to The Disney Channel about six months ago, and think it's the greatest thing on TV for kids and adults. My generation grew up with Walt Disney and I will be very happy to grow old with his legacy.

In 1985, the Boy Scouts of America celebrates its Diamond Jubilee—we're 75 years old. And I would like to know if The Disney Channel could recognize this by some programming about us.

I feel there would be a lot of interest in some documentary, or simply a re-run of "Follow Me, Boys" with Fred MacMurray.

A. J. Leonetta
Scoutmaster, Troop 483
West Seneca, NY

Congratulations, Boy Scouts, on your Diamond Jubilee! To help you celebrate, we're airing "Follow Me, Boys" this month (see page 10).

Exploring the Archives

Dave Smith, archivist for Walt Disney Productions, answers questions and provides information about the studio's history and its productions.

In how many languages are Disney books and comics published, and which countries have been the most prolific? —R.T.J., Greenwich, Conn.

In the Archives, we have Disney publications in 36 different languages from 46 countries. The largest output has come from France, Italy and Japan.

I have an old Disney 16mm cartoon called "Donald Duck the Mechanic," but I don't find that title among the lists of Disney films. What's the story? —K.P., Akron, Ohio

The film you have is a shortened version of one of the Disney theatrical cartoons, "Mickey's Service Station" (1935), which was released for the home movie market by Hollywood Film Enterprises. These versions were sold in the 1930s and 1940s, and since each cartoon was divided into several segments, the resulting two- or three-minute films were given new titles by the distributor.

Merlin vs. Mim in "Sword in the Stone"

What was the last animated feature film produced by Walt Disney? —A.A., Evanston, Ill.

Walt Disney was very involved with the production of "The Jungle Book," which was released the year after his death, but the last one actually released during his lifetime was "The Sword in the Stone" (see page 9).

DISNEY CHANNEL TRIVIA

...For "Follow Me, Boys!" (see page 10), a tremendous assemblage of vintage cars added to the nostalgic feel of the comedy. Included were a 1915 Baker Electric, a 1927 Lincoln touring car, a fleet of 1929 Fords and Chevrolets, and three plush Cadillacs of 1940, 1946, and 1950 vintage.

...The story of "The Million Dollar Duck" (see page 9) was by Ted Key, the cartoonist of the popular "Hazel" comic panel.

...Besides this month's "Misadventures of Merlin Jones" (see page 10), how many Disney features can you recall which co-starred Annette Funicello and Tommy Kirk?*

Readers who have Disney-related questions can write to Dave Smith, c/o The Disney Channel Magazine, 4111 W. Alameda Ave., Burbank, CA 91505.

*("The Shaggy Dog," "The Horsemasters," "Escapade in Florence," "Babes in Toyland," "The Monkey's Uncle." They also appeared together in a Disney TV special, "Backstage Party.")

My Tribute to Walt

Walt Disney was a famous man,
One of the greatest in our land.
He created fun for the young and old,
With all the wonderful stories he told.
Walt Disney was a famous man.

Walt Disney's stories were the magical kind
Straight from his heart, and then to your mind.
His stories have lived for many years;
Some brought laughs and some brought tears.
Walt Disney was a famous man.

Walt Disney created a world of his dreams.
He used many different props and scenes.
His stories will live on and on,
Even though Walt Disney is gone.
Walt Disney is a famous man.

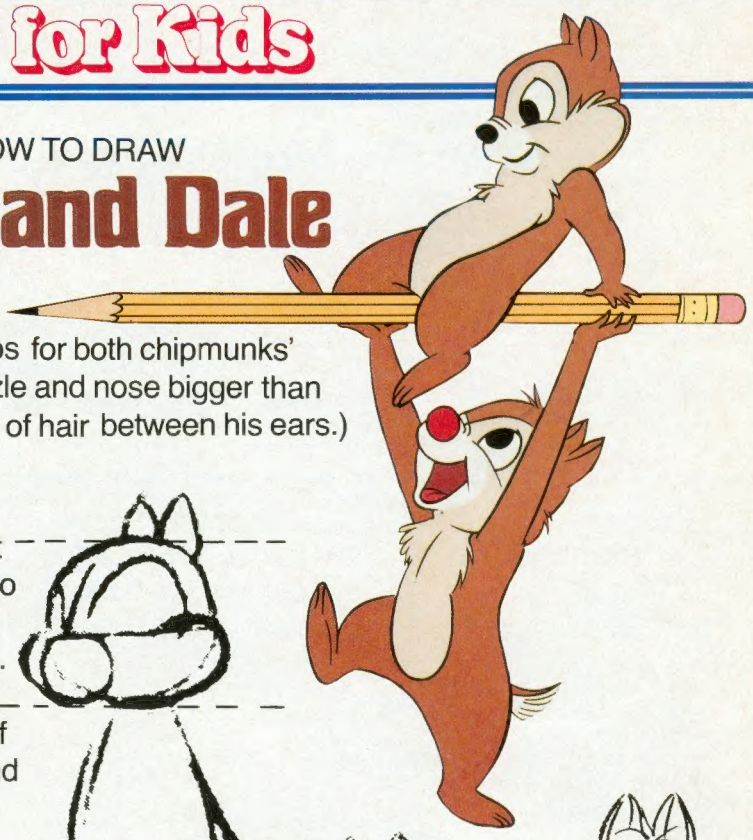
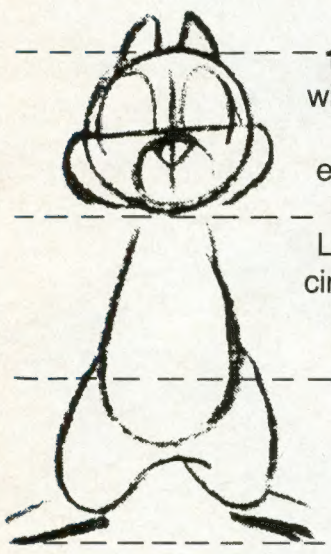
HOW TO DRAW

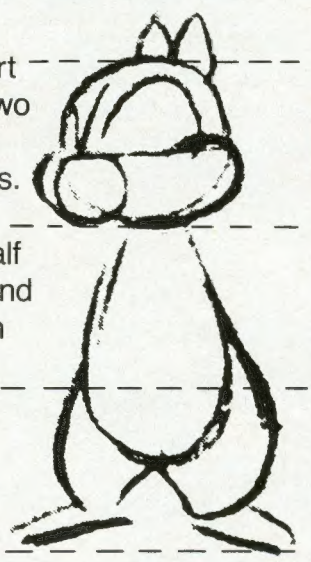
Chip and Dale



Follow the directions here to draw these cheeky fellows. (Follow the same steps for both chipmunks' bodies and heads, but make Dale's muzzle and nose bigger than Chip's and add a topknot of hair between his ears.)

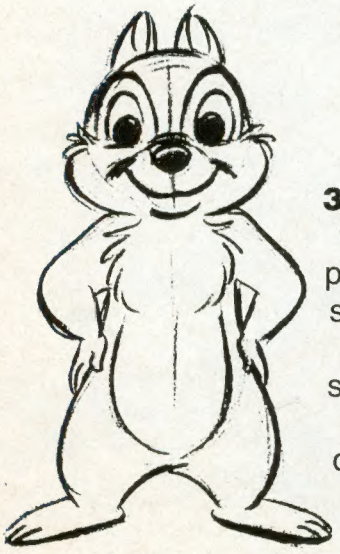


1. For the head, start with a circle. Sketch two fat semi-circles on either side for cheeks. Add triangle ears. Lightly sketch in a half circle for the muzzle and half ovals as shown for the eyes.



2. Draw a pear shape for the body. Add two fat ovals connected by a curved line for the legs. Draw two skinny ovals for the feet.

CHIP



3. Draw a curved line from the top of the pear down to the leg shape on each side as shown. Draw a second, parallel line inside the first to create arms. Finish off with details as shown.

DALE

SOME EXPRESSIONS

Hands are small with claw-like fingers.

Skin fits loosely over body like long underwear.
